

tal soul through having loved and suffered.

The piece is by Edward Sheldon, from a story by Hans Christian Andersen, and the leading role is interpreted with much charm and appeal by Emily Stevens.

New York has thus far seen Phyllis Nellson-Terry in only one play of her classic repertoire, "Twelfth Night," but her performance of Viola is of itself sufficient to show why she has packed the theaters in which she has appeared in London.

Young, beautiful, a finished artist and possessed of a wonderful grace and buoyancy, the English star interprets this heroine of Shakespeare as few women could—certainly as few have, within the memory of this generation.

Eben Plympton as Sir Toby Belch and Cecil Cameron as the clown shine brilliantly in Miss Nellson-Terry's support, which is of unusual excellence throughout. Cecil King has staged the play beautifully.

TELEGRAPH BRIEFS

Madison, Wis. — Hunters blamed by O. H. Eliason, state veterinarian, for spread of foot and mouth disease in vicinity of Oregon, Wis. Will be arrested as trespassers in future.

Lacrosse, Wis.—Geo. Niessen demanded workman's compensation from telephone company because horse threw mud in his eye. Denied.

Port Huron, Mich.—Mrs. Duncan McIntyre, 45, suicided by drowning. Deranged from worrying over illness of husband.

Belvidere, Ill.—Gilbert Fry, prominent farmer, suicided. Carbolic.

LITTLE GIRL AWARDED MEDAL FOR SAVING 3 BABIES IN FIRE

Atlanta, Ga.—Little Nell Brantley's heroism has been rewarded. Following the recently published story of how this ten-year-old girl rescued two nephews and a niece from their burning home, the Purino hero commission has awarded her a medal.

The Brantley home was burned last spring. When Nell discovered the fire three children—Boyd Sullivan, aged 5; John, 4, and Gladys, 2—were playing in an upstairs room. Their mother, who is a sister to Nell Brantley, was ill in bed from a surgical operation.

Little Nell dragged the children

Nell Brantley

through the smoke to safety; grabbed a bucket and fought fire until the danger line was drawn about the walls; then suddenly remembered that her poodle, Togo, was in the house and slipped past the firemen to rescue him.